

Dr. Julie Pasche is a plant pathologist at North Dakota State University. The mission of her research program is to improve management of economically important diseases of potatoes. She is fortunate to work with a talented group of post-docs, research scientists, and graduate students. Currently, Julie's research is focused on the characterization, detection, and management of soil-borne pathogens. Her program also works heavily in fungicide resistance and integrated pest management.