

Biography

Dr. Jonathan Neilson leads the Potato Health research group at the Lethbridge Research and Development Center. His research has potato as a mandate but takes a systems based approach. This includes elements of plant physiology, soil health and plant phenotyping. The objective is to develop tools and methods to assess the status of potato production systems and use this information to improve long term sustainability and climate resiliency of potato production.